Overview

Over the past two years, a trend has evolved where more and more people are falling into depression and mental health issues. This is not surprising. The COVID-19 pandemic among other social and economic issues have become overwhelming to a vast majority of the population.

However, not much has changed to provide employees with reliable and affordable care. When your staff are not mentally healthy, your organization cannot rely on your staff...

Many people believe that massage and wellness therapy relieve pain and stress and are better alternatives to prescription drugs and surgery.

Studies have shown that a relaxed mind and body are more creative and productive than stressed out, depressed individuals.

The last step in maintaining a healthy work-life balance is to make sure your employees don't spend the whole day behind the computer screen.

Many chronic diseases are preventable and creating healthy work retreats will get you and your employees one step closer to living a healthy life.

Companies that support workers well-being are more likely to be branded positively in the community.
